he spate of layoffs at the crisis-rid-den Bylu's has upended the lives of several people who worked at what was once the poster child of the Indian educeh industry. While some have moved to other educeh platforms at lower salaries, there are those who have left the sector alto-gether, opting instead to take up jobs in potentially stable industries.

Shikha Kuthiala, a mathematics teacher who was given the pink slip during Bylis August-September 2023 layoff round, said the stress of losing the job was a much emotional as financial. "Although I was not the sole earner in my family, my portion of fincome was suddenly cut, and more than financial, it took a mental told," be said. "Balking about the discomfort more than financial, it took a mental toll," she said. Talking about the discomfort that was majorly caused by the sudden-ness of the process, she said, "You get used to a certain style of spending, and then overnight, you become dependent on somebody else. It leaves you helpless and confused."

Kuthila now works with another edtech platform, earning less than she did at Byju's. "The layoff period was tough," said a former employee who left Byju's in July 2023 after working in the video department for five years.

As the layoffs became frequent and the worry of losing the job set in, others too started exiting the company, said this person asking not to be named. "The to the fear caused by the Byli's crisis, several employees have chosen to take up entry-level jobs in firms other than edtech," this person said. "They are ready to work at lower salaries if that industry is stable."

This slim volume throws light on the experiences of men who are marginalise in heteronormative spaces because of their sexual orientation, and excluded from gay spaces on account of their racial identity or ethnic origin. It shows that eople who face discrimination are not sarily free of bigotry themselves While this is common sense, perhaps it needs to be articulated explicitly in an age where people think that their lack of privilege in one aspect of their lives makes them immune to criticism or makes them immune to criticism or accountability for their behaviour. The author notes, "Such behaviour (racism) is very common among (racism) is very common among homosexuals, some of whom goeven farther by protesting; But I can't be racist! The milestone followed another bumper revenue forecast from the chip designer that drove up its market value by $27 billion on Thursday — Wall Street's largest one-day gain on record. Its rapid ascent in the past year has led analysts to draw parallels to the picks and showed providers during the gold rush of 1800s as Nvidia's chips are used by almost all generative AI players from chatGPT-maker OpenAIto Google.
